The diagram shows a rectangular floor plan. A dashed line runs horizontally across the lower portion of the rectangle, dividing it into two main areas. The area above the dashed line is further divided by vertical lines into three sections: a small square on the left, a larger rectangle in the middle, and a small square on the right. The area below the dashed line is a single large rectangle. The dashed line is positioned such that the height of the lower rectangle is equal to the height of the middle rectangle in the upper section.
